Interview

In a recent interview, Alberto Ferreira shared his thoughts on drumming, music, and his creative process.

What do you think makes a great drummer?

Alberto Ferreira: A great drummer is someone who has a deep understanding of rhythm and a strong sense of groove. They are able to play with creativity and innovation, and they always put the music first. They are also able to connect with their audience and make them feel the music.

What is your creative process like?

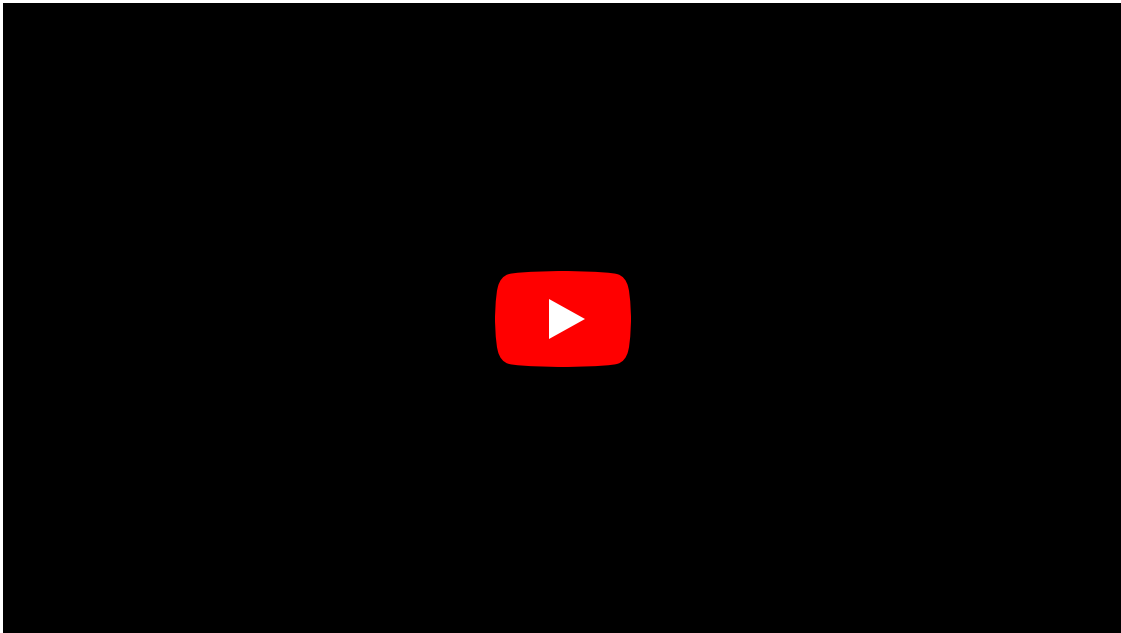

Alberto Ferreira: My creative process starts with listening to music and trying to find new rhythms and grooves. I also like to experiment with different sounds and textures. Once I have a good idea for a song, I start to develop it by playing it on drums and singing along. I may also use a drum machine or sequencer to help me create the rhythm and melody.

What is the most important thing you've learned about drumming?

Alberto Ferreira: The most important thing I've learned about drumming is that it's all about the groove. If you don't have a good groove, then you're not going to be able to connect with your audience. It's also important to be creative and innovative with your drumming. Don't be afraid to experiment and try new things.
